BLAST-OFF THAT PAYS OFF. Roy Woodle, Convair Flight Engineer, supervises an Air Force Atlas Satellite Launch that will relay information from outer space to increase knowledge of the earth and aid weather forecasting and communications. This brilliant, young space engineer smokes Camels. He says they're the only cigarettes that give him real satisfaction every time he lights up.

Are you smoking more now but enjoying it less?

WELCOME TO FENWAY PARK

The Red Sox are happy to welcome you to this All Star Game, the first to be played at Fenway Park since 1946. That was a most memorable occasion, as Ted Williams hit two home runs and led the American League to a 12-0 victory over the National League.

It's appropriate therefore that Ted is back at Fenway Park to throw out the first ball, representing the great stars who have performed here at Fenway through the years.

Today you'll be watching the greatest stars of both major leagues, some of them appearing in Boston for the first time, and I'm sure it will be a memorable occasion for all of us.

The Red Sox and their legions of fans are proud to play host to this 1961 All Star Game . . . WELCOME!!

Steeped as this city is in baseball tradition, it seems quite proper that the game's outstanding players should be meeting today in Boston.

Boston was a charter member of both Major Leagues. The Boston Club was a participant in the very first World Series, and despite the fact that fifty-eight years have elapsed since then, names like Jimmy Collins, Cy Young and Bill Dinneen are still remembered.

The National League's first victory in an All-Star game, after three straight defeats, came in Boston twenty-five years ago. And the American League scored more runs in one game, twelve, than any other All-Star team when they shut out the National League here fifteen years ago.

But, deeper than any of these things, is the tradition of baseball itself in the New England area. The players who have come to the Major Leagues, and the fans who have supported baseball throughout the years, both have made tremendous contributions to the success of the game.

On behalf of all baseball, I would like to extend to the people of New England a most sincere welcome to baseball's greatest mid-summer attraction, the All-Star Game.

THE 1946 ALL-STAR GAME

To select any one day as the most perfect Ted Williams ever had as a major league batsman would be a difficult task because of the many great days Ted had during his long and thrilling baseball career. But he never was more magnificent in his copyrighted specialty—HITTING—than he was in the last All-Star game played in Boston.

That game was played at Fenway Park, July 9, 1946, and Ted turned what had become a one-sided debacle and rout of the National League's best representatives into one of the most pleasing and interesting of all "Dream Games" with one of the most perfect days at bat he ever had.

That the National Leaguers were humiliated by the most lop-sided of all All-Star game scores, 12 to 0, was greatly due to Ted's tremendous batting prowess. He went to bat five times during the game, received a base on balls the first time, then hit two home runs with two singles sandwiched in between the circuit wallops for a perfect day. He drove in five runs and scored four more himself.

This was not any weak or off-year team that was so soundly trounced, and the pitchers were as capable and reputable as is usually the case. But Williams had a day that was as thrilling as a great National League pitcher, Carl Hubbell, had in a similar game back in 1934 in which he achieved lasting fame by striking out Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Jimmy Foxx, Al Simmons and Joe Cronin in succession in two innings.

The pitchers in the 1946 game were Claude Passeau of the Chicago Cubs, Kirby Higbe of the Brooklyn Dodgers, Ewell Blackwell of the Cincinnati Reds, and Truett "Rip" Sewell of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

It was against the pitching of Passeau that Ted won the All-Star game of 1941 at Detroit with a tremendous home run in the ninth inning. In the 1946 game, Ted faced Passeau only once, receiving the base on balls in the opening inning, and he soon scored on a home run by the Yankee's Charley Keller.

The game had become an 8 to 0 rout after seven innings. For the American Leaguers, Bob Feller of the Cleveland Indians had given up only two hits in his three innings; Hal Newhouser of Detroit's Tigers one hit in his three, and Jack Kramer of the St. Louis Browns had pitched the first of three hitless innings.

The slugging American Leaguers had made 10 hits in seven innings, and Rip Sewell had come in to pitch.

Rip had experimented and perfected, as much as was possible, a pitch which was called a "blooper" pitch for want of a better name. It was a pitch such as a doting father tosses to his very young son in the back yard, a parabolic toss rather than a throw. Sewell did not use it too often, but his sense of showmanship prompted him to use it in this game of national interest which had got out of hand after Stuffy Stirnweiss had led off in that eighth with a single. With one man out, the pitcher, Kramer had hit the left field wall at Fenway with a single, and a run soon scored on a long fly for the second out.

The first blooper pitch went to Vern Stephens, who hit it between the first and second basemen for a double. Now up stepped Ted.

He had homered as lead-off man in the fourth with Higbe pitching, hitting a curve ball on a one strike, two balls count into the narrow strip of bleachers back of the bull pen in centre field. He had hit a line-drive single to right which drove in a run and forced Higbe out of the game in the fifth. He started a two-run flurry after two were out in the seventh with Blackwell throwing his whip-like pitches by hitting a single off the glove of Phil Cavaretta at first base.

Sewell wasted no time with Ted. His first pitch was a blooper and the packed house of 34,906 fans let out a roar as Ted swung and hit the pitch; but Ted had not timed it perfectly and fouled the ball into the left field stands. Sewell fooled Ted with a fast ball for a called strike.

Now Ted had to be careful. He could easily become the goat of the situation. Sewell threw another blooper, but it was wide of the plate as it came down out of the air. Another one made its arc and appeared to be coming down over the plate.

Ted took a couple of steps forward and swung his bat. His timing was perfect now. Bat met ball and away it sailed towards right field. It seemed as high as it was long, and Red Sox pitcher, Mickey Harris, warming up in the bull pen, caught the ball as it landed, over 400 feet from the plate.

The roar of the crowd was deafening. It was a theatrical situation featured by both Williams and Sewell. It mattered not an iota that the score now was 12 to 0. Never before had a home run been hit off a Sewell blooper pitch. In fact, the only extra base hit ever made off one had been an accidental triple.

Sewell had dared to throw the pitch, and Williams was capable of hitting it for a home run. It was a remarkable performance.

A Ralph likes mountains (big ones, snow-capped), but he'll settle for the flatlands as long as he can be out in the open where it's cool and fresh. He likes a cool fresh taste in his cigarette, too.

B Harry's a long-legged, square-jawed fellow who gets a kick out of tough competition. When he plays, he plays for keeps. When it's time to relax, he likes to settle back with a full-flavored smoke.

C Fred's a Phi Beta Kappa with a steel-trap mind and a sharp eye for detail. He looks for the little things that add up to quality, from the stitching in a lapel, to the recessed filter in his cigarette.

D Howard has plenty of money and terrific taste. He likes the best of whatever he buys, from garters to guns. He pays more, and he gets more. Naturally, he smokes the world's choicest tobaccos.

E Ted likes a taut ship and plenty of friends aboard. He likes the punch of a strong wind and the snap of a big sail. He also likes a king-size, clean-cut cigarette with some taste to it.

DANNY MURTAUGH
Pittsburgh Pirates Manager

FOR THE AMERICANS

PAUL RICHARDS
Baltimore Orioles Manager

This is Boston's third All-Star Game and the second at beautiful Fenway Park, the home of the Red Sox. The first one was played at Braves Field, July 7, 1936, the second at Fenway Park, July 9, 1946.

Murtaugh's appointment as leader of the National League players was the result of the pennant victory of the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1960, crowned by a spectacular World Series triumph. Danny has been held in high esteem as a baseball man since his playing days in which he was considered one of the game's keenest students.

Leading the American Leaguers is Paul Richards. As manager of the Chicago White Sox and since taking over as director of the Baltimore Orioles, he has made a deep impression as a baseball tactician and a developer of players. He is noted by all, players, press and fans, for the originality of his strategy and baseball tactics.

Found: A better way to make summer gin drinks

*Of course you want 'em cold. One way to make 'em extra cold is to keep a supply of glasses frosted in the refrigerator. But the great thing to remember is, the dryer the better. And that means Seagram's, the one gin that's stored away until every trace of the usual gin sweetness and perfumery is gone. Seagram's Extra Dry Gin makes a tastier Tom Collins, a zestier Gin-and-Tonic, a dryer Martini-on-the-rocks. Connie Mack (left), then an active manager of the Philadelphia Athletics at the age of 70, "chooses up sides" with John McGraw, who had just retired as manager of the New York Giants. To these venerable "Hall of Famers" went the honor of managing the first All Star classic. They posed for this photo before the game.

The FIRST ALL STAR GAME

July 6, 1933 – Comiskey Park
Chicago, Ill.

American League—4 – National League—2

The first major league All Star game was played in Chicago's Comiskey Park on July 6, 1933 as a highlight event of the Chicago World's Fair. The managers were Connie Mack for the Americans and John Mc-Graw for the Nationals. Babe Ruth, with a long two-run homer in the third inning, led the A. L. to a 4-2 victory. Fourteen of the 36 men on the two squads have already been elected to the Hall of Fame.

Why is one of these whiskies insured for One Million Dollars?

SOLID-GOLD BARS courtesy of Handy & Harman, a U.S. Treasury Department licensee

Answer: The whiskey on the right is insured because it is Calvert's one million dollar "Standard of Excellence"—the lightest, finest, best-tasting whiskey, we believe, ever created.

The Calvert Reserve on the left—and every bottle you buy—must match this "Standard of Excellence" for lighter taste, finer taste, better taste. Taste that never varies. Always "good as gold." Shouldn't you enjoy it tonight?

For lighter taste...

National League Team

Wins First 1961 All-Star Game

Sharp, sudden crackling hits by Hank Aaron of the Braves, Willie Mays of the Giants and Roberto Clemente of the Pirates gave the National League a 5 to 4 10th inning victory over the American League in the 30th All-Star game played at Candlestick Park at San Francisco, Cal., July 11, 1961.

The vaunted batting power of the American Leaguers had been stilled for the first eight innings. Against the pitching of Warren Spahn, Bob Purkey and Mike McCormick, there had been only one hit, a home run by Harmon Killebrew as a pinch hitter in the sixth inning.

The final several innings of that game was dominated, not by the brilliance of the pitching and the defense nor by the prowess of the batsmen, but by the wind which blows at Candlestick Park. Whether the wind dictated the final outcome of the game will be a subject that will be discussed for years.

The players moaned about the wind, the American Leaguers in particular because they had not experienced it previously.

"We were told about the wind," said Manager Paul Richards, "but you have to feel it to believe it.

"Conditions were miserable, but I don't blame our defeat on the wind because it blows for both teams."

The wind was blowing at full gale force when the ninth inning started. Elroy Face, whose Pittsburgh reputation is that he is almost "unbeatable" in late innings, was the pitcher with a comfortable 3 to 1 lead. Soon the game was all tied up at 3-3, and Face and Sandy Koufax had come and gone as pitchers. Stu Miller was now on the mound and could have been the scapegoat of the event—a balk was called on him, and he would not deny that the wind caused the balk.

Hoyt Wilhelm, famed for his great ability as a knuckle ball pitcher, was American League pitcher in the last half of the 10th inning and his team had taken a one-run lead in the first half of that inning. The wind did not aid knuckle ball pitching. Aaron, pinch hitting, led off with a single and moved to second base when a knuckler got away from the catcher. Mays dropped a ball back of the third baseman for a two base hit which scored the tying run. After Frank Robinson was hit by a pitch, up stepped the Pirate's Clemente and he wasted no time, smashing a hit to right center which sent Mays home with the winning run.
